

Projects Coordinator International twinning

Research projects develop new technologies, knowledge and experiences. The output of the projects, mainly publications usually are not able to transfer the total knowledge that partners have matured.

Technologies have to be adapted to new conditions; what is running in European Union agricultural may be not adaptable in developing countries. Only with the experiences that the partnership have developed, new technologies may be adapted to different agricultural conditions.

Cooperation among Coordinators of Research Projects is a mutual sharing and exchange of developed solutions - knowledge, experiences and good practices, technology and resources, among countries.

Cooperation involves partnerships between developing countries with European partners typically Research Institute partner and/or multilateral organization that have developed solutions for achieve food security, energy security, poverty reduction and sustainable agriculture.

Its efforts focus on:

- facilitating the exchange and sharing of development solutions, providing practical guidance and support to ensure high quality knowledge sharing (short-, medium- and long-term exchanges, learning routes, study tours and training);
- fostering knowledge management and networks, connecting European Countries with developing Countries in order to scaling up knowledge sharing and enhancing two-way learning
- facilitating upstream policy support, including policy dialogue and knowledge sharing among policy-makers;
- fostering an enabling food security, energy security, poverty reduction and sustainable agriculture, mobilizing broader partnerships and resources and raising international visibility.

The twinning can plays various roles, FAO and European Union activities for Research and Scientific Cooperation indications, exchanging of experts, developing of common research activities, scientific publications and technologies.
